English Opera.

THE ENGLISH COMPOSERS AND THEIR WORKS. In the course of an interesting article on English opera, a writer in the Cincinnati Enquirer of the 1st instant gives this list of the most popular lyric works on the English stage.

Forty years ago Sir Henry Bishop, the director of Covent Garden and Drury Lane, wrote no opera, properly so called. In his day the nearest approaches to true opera were plays like Guy Rammerey, Rob Roy, The Knight of Shandon, and The Miller and His Men.

A fresh coloring, a new direction, and a novel application of scientific principles were associated with natural impulses, and produced English opera. The very first season the Lyceum, built in 1825, expressly to exhibit and foster this new musical energy, was distinguished by the production of two works of striking merit, the Nourjahad of Mr. Edward Loder, and the Mountain Sylph of Mr. John Barnett.

The next successful piece was Michael Balfe's Siege of Rochelle, produced at Drury Lane. This was quickly followed by the Maid of Artois, illustrated by the genius of Malibran, then in the height of her powers, and in 1831, by the same name master, appeared Jean, or Catherine Grey, The Enchantress, The Daughter of St. Mark, The Bandouin, and, last and greatest, The Bohemian Girl, which immediately seized the public ear, and ran for more than a hundred nights at Drury Lane. Then came Vincent Wallace, whose Mariana was hailed with but little less enthusiasm than The Bohemian Girl.

The next successes were won by Mr. Barnett's Catalina, Macfarren's Don Quixote, Roake's Annie, or The Love Token, and Henriques, Balfe's Diademe and Kolanthe. The list from 1835 to the present day may, we believe, be completed by the following operas in chronological order:—Night Dances, by Loder; Macfarren's Charles I., Balfe's Maid of Honor and Sicilian Bride, Howard Glover's Avanti, Henry Smart's Bertha, Balfe's Rose of Castile, Howard Glover's Roy Bush, Alfred Mellon's Victoria, Wallace's Lorraine and Leoni's Triumph, Balfe's Puritan's Daughter, Scuderi and Macfarren's Charles, Howard Glover's Once Two Op'ns, Macfarren's Robin Hood, Wallace's Amber Witch and Desert Flower, and a few other operas by Mori, George Macfarren, Henri Leslie, and Arthur Sullivan.

"Surely this long list of operas, all composed in thirty-five years, and many of them favorites in England, the Continent of Europe and America, should be sufficient to inspire us with the most confident expectations for the future. That the English language yields to musical intonations with a facility equal to the German and Italian has been abundantly proved, by the English rendition of masterpieces like Trovatore, by Verdi; Sonnambula, by Bellini; Mozart's Figaro, and Carl Maria von Weber's Oberon. We do not hazard much when we predict that ere many years roll by the varied genius of America will build upon the solid foundation of England a school of opera which in process of time may compete, and not, perhaps, without success, for the laurels now yielded only to the great masters of Italy and Germany!

The death is announced, in his sixty-ninth year, of Mr. John Wood, the artist. For many years, until incapacitated by illness, he was a constant exhibitor on the walls of the Royal Academy, where, as a student, he gained several medals, among them the gold medal, in 1825, for his picture of "Joseph Expounding the Dream of Pharaoh's Chief Butler and Baker." His largest and most important works were the altar-piece, "Ascension, in St. James' Church, Berkeley Square, and the "Baptism of our Saviour in the Jordan," which was chosen in public competition by the late Prince Consort as worthy of the £1000 prize offered by Mr. Bell, a member of the Baptist denomination. Mr. W. J. Prowse, who, says the Echo, in the course of a brief life did a great amount of literary work, though in a quiet and unobtrusive manner, died at Cimiez, near Nice, on the morning of Easter Sunday. For several years past he was a member of the editorial staff of the Daily Telegraph. His latest written words, however, are to be found in a paper in the current number of Macmillan upon "Smollett at Nice."

The death is reported of a gentleman, who was actively connected with a great number of religious and philanthropic institutions of London.—Mr. William James Maxwell, Mr. Maxwell was a magistrate for the county of Surrey.

The following extract of a letter received from Mr. Carlyle, on the migration question, was recently read in the course of a debate in the Australian Legislature:—"The subject used to be of earnest, almost painful interest to me in old years. It seemed to me that no nation ever had such glorious opportunities of changing its nearly intolerable curses and choking nightmares into blessings and winged angels, as Great Britain by colonizing, or was so scandalously throwing said opportunities away. I have since learned that Great Britain will go on with parliamentary palaver, etc., were the Day of Judgment close at hand, and turn a deaf
